Nevada passed such an “education savings account program” in 2015. Although the legislature has yet to fund the program, the program would provide parents funds to pay for a variety of educational services for their children, including private school tuition, distance learning programs, tutoring, curriculum, therapies for students with special needs, post-secondary educational institutions in Nevada, and other defined educational services. Accounts for low-income students and those with special needs would be worth up to $5,967 and accounts for all other students would be worth up to $5,370. Funds remaining in an account at the end of a school year would be rolled over to the next school year.

Nevada enacted such a “tax-credit scholarship program” in 2015, called the Opportunity Scholarship and formally known as the Educational Choice Scholarship Program. The program’s nonprofit scholarship organizations provide scholarships to low-and-middle income students, so they can attend a private school of their choice, including both religious and non-religious schools. The student’s parent then uses the scholarship to pay partial or full tuition for the chosen private school.

In general, do you favor or oppose this tax-credit scholarship program? [PROBE:]
